The US Convenience Store Market

Executive Summary

A convenience store is a form of kiosk or a small retail business which is opened as a part of gas stations in the US. The convenience stores stock a range of items of everyday necessity such as beverages, beer, tobacco, snacks, confectionary, toiletries, drugs, magazines, etc. Inception of convenience store idea was in the US. Convenience stores are based on different formats including Kiosk, mini convenience store, limited selection convenience store, traditional convenience store, etc.

The convenience stores could be segmented on the basis of fuel sales because after refilling the vehicle, the consumer generally has an urge to buy some other stuff as well. This 'urge' of consumer is satiated by convenience store.

Convenience stores (C-store or CVS) are different from grocery stores, drugstores and supermarkets. Convenience stores have their own set of features and downside.

The US convenience store market has increased at a significant CAGR during the years 2010-2016 and projections are made that the market would rise further in 2017-2018 tremendously. The US convenience store market is expected to increase due to growth in US GDP Per-capita, increasing urban population, etc. Yet the market faces some challenges such as, environmental regulations, legislative regulations, etc.
