Global Omni-channel Retail Market Report

Executive Summary

The commercial transactions are undergoing a significant transformation, worldwide. The commercial transactions are of four types namely, B2B, B2C, C2C and C2B. The B2C is also known as the retail sector. The customer shopping experience has evolved over the years; from going to a physical store to purchase a product or a service; to purchasing the same product or service under the umbrella of e-commerce; to buying the same product or a service through multiple channels (that includes smartphones, web or a physical store); to finally been made available the same product or service at the customer's demand at anywhere and anytime.

The omni-channel basically aims at integrating all diverse shopping channels into one, so that consumer efforts are reduced and at the same time they make an informed choice. The omni-channel retailing aims at enhancing the customer buying experience by allowing them to seamlessly access the same product or a service across different channels of shopping.

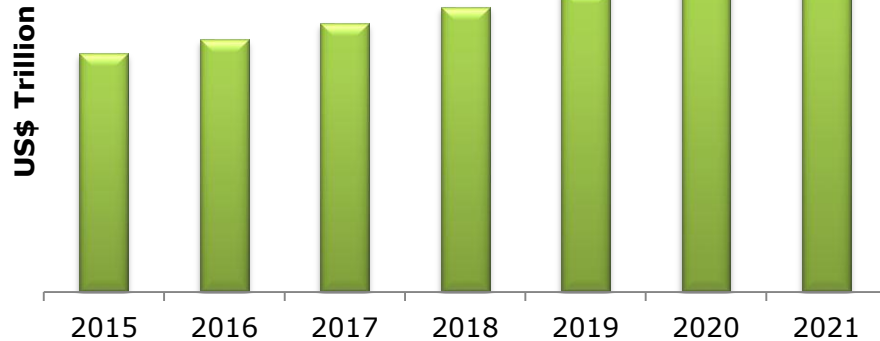

The concept of omni-channel is not only limited to retail, but is spreading across government, financial/banking and B2B channel too.

The working of omni-channel retailing encompasses inventory visibility, web-ready products, customer analysis and fulfillment strategy. Oneview Commerce is the only company currently that has designed the omni-channel solution and is working towards implementing it in the point of sale terminals that are replacing the traditional point of sale terminals.

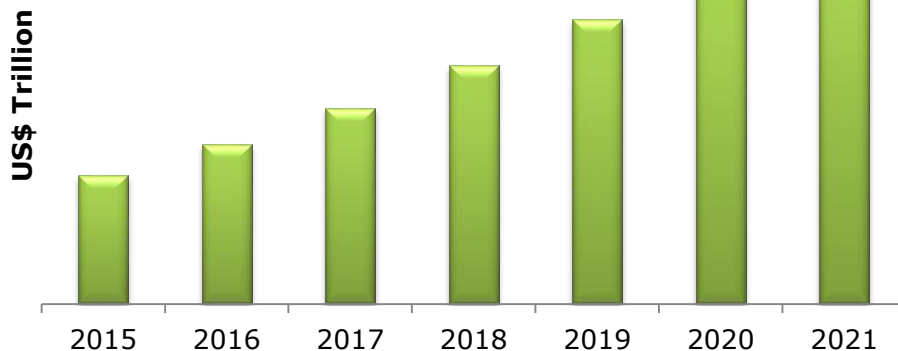

The global addressable market for omni-channel retail is anticipated to increase at a significant CAGR during the years 2017-2021. The omni-channel retail market is expected to increase due to growth in retail e-commerce industry, technological up gradation, innovations in point of sale terminal technology, increasing smartphone users, etc. Yet the market faces some challenges such as, need to develop sound order management system (OMS), reluctance to adoption of omni-channel retail concept, fast paced software development, etc.
